A biosensor is an analytical device that recognizes and responds to a specific biological target. Biosensors are typically designed to be portable and inexpensive and to provide accurate and quick results. Applications of biosensors include environmental monitoring, medical testing and diagnostic testing, food testing and analysis, and the like. A typical biosensor employs one or more sensing devices for detecting a target biomolecule in a sample. Some sensing devices operate by measuring a physical effect of the target biomolecule on the sensing device. For example, a binding event between a target biomolecule and a biomolecular recognition element (e.g., an antibody, aptamer or aptamer analog) can trigger a physical change in the sensing device. Commonly used sensing devices include electrochemical sensing devices, optical sensing devices, and molecular sensing devices. Biosensors are usually integrated with a silicon chip. The silicon chip carries a number of microfluidic channels and various microelectrodes. When a target biomolecule in a sample interacts with a biomolecular recognition element (e.g., an antibody, aptamer or aptamer analog) on the surface of a sensing device, the binding event can be detected by various measuring techniques, including impedance-based techniques. Some biosensors can perform multiple sensing operations (e.g., detecting a plurality of target biomolecules simultaneously in a sample) without being designed for such multiple sensing operations. Starbucks is opening its first store in Poland, with plans to open 100 more in the EU by 2025. The Roastery & Reserve Roastery, Bialystok, Polish capital is the first Starbucks to open outside the US. "At Starbucks, we set ourselves apart with the simple belief that coffee should be about more than just coffee, and committed to creating a better coffee culture in the world," said Kevin Johnson, Starbucks president of the company's global retail & COO of Starbucks Operations. "Roastery Bialystok will be a new, third flagship store in Poland, where we hope to elevate the experience of coffee through state-of-the-art equipment, best-in-class roasting and brewing, unparalleled coffee purity and artistry and premium coffee and tea beverages for our guests." Starbucks will open in January 2019. Starbucks, with its ro ba244e880a
