I can create a QGraphicsPixmapItem on Windows, but not on Linux. The following code works fine on Windows but throws an error on Linux: #include int main(int argc, char *argv[]) { QApplication a(argc, argv); QGraphicsPixmapItem item(QPixmap(":/images/home.jpg")); return a.exec(); } When I run the above code on Linux, it produces the following output: WARNING: Syntax warning in: #include "qclocale.h" WARNING: Format not a Win32 platform: '.' ('%'). WARNING: Syntax warning in: #include "qclocale.h" WARNING: Undefined macro QT_QMAKE_EXECUTABLE. checking for main in -lqtmain checking for main in -lqtmain_x11 checking for main in -lX11 missing libX11.a(x11proto.o): No such file or directory -lX11 returned 1 I'm using Qt Creator 2.4.1 on Linux to create the C++ Qt Project files (and compile them). I have Qt 4.8.3 installed on both my Windows 7 machine and my Ubuntu machine. A: It turned out that I did not have libqtmain_x11 installed. So, I was able to install libqtmain_x11 through apt-get. I was very surprised by the room, which was located in the attic of the building next to the lecture room. Here there was a big oval, which I think was a boxing match. Everything was there, a roof, some seating, and suddenly in the center was a boxing ring. The building had windows on all floors. In the basement was also a boxing ring. During my first visit, there were three lectures: one lecture room, and two boxing rings, so I had to decide which lecture to attend.
