Statewide data for prisoners shows California has released the most inmates in the last five years. The number of people released from California's prisons grew significantly faster than the number entering the system, according to a new report by Pew Charitable Trusts. Between 2010 and 2014, the state discharges 36,900 inmates — an average of 861 per month — while it admits an average of 8,738 people per month, according to the report, released Tuesday. In a statement, the Corrections Data Initiative, which produced the report, wrote that the prison population fluctuates seasonally, but the trend is troubling. The data "reveal an alarming widening gap in
