Now is the time to file for that laptop.Q: Change properties of an element in an array, while maintaining an index I'm currently trying to build a simple memetics game in the vein of classic meme-based text-based word games like Scrabble. I've got a set of letters that I want the user to choose from and I'd like to tell them which one is 'winning' at the end of the game. My data structure is an array of 'words' (perhaps a dictionary) that I use to build sentences. Each 'word' is simply an array of letters, and each letter of each 'word' is a separate individual. I was thinking of making a property called 'winning' that gets set to true for the winning 'word' of each sentence. While it's important for the winning 'word' to be determined by the order in which it is declared in the array (as it represents the subject of the sentence), I'd also like for the user to be able to set the winning word as they choose, but without changing the relative positions of the words (the index). I've already considered two ways of doing this. The first involves using a List as the array, with the winning 'word' being the last item in the list. The issue with this is that I don't know how to iterate over the elements of a list without counting them. When the user changes a property of an element, I want that element to become the new 'winning' 'word'. However, the array will have to be reindexed, and since I don't know the final index of the 'winning' element, it becomes tricky. Alternatively, I considered using a Dictionary, but that involves indexing a word (as a key) by an integer that represents the position in the array, which has the same problem as the list option. My question is, would either of these options be appropriate for my use case? I've already tried Googling around, but I haven't had much luck. A: Your problem seems to be that you have a list of words, and you want to allow changing the "winning" one without reordering the list. This is not a common use case and I would take that as
