Direct link to download: who owns a home and eats at an Italian restaurant knows what we're talking about," said Mr. Estabrook, referring to local lore that the term for former residents of rural New Jersey is "Jerseytards." In Burlington, a city that likes to think of itself as a cultural leader, there is an Italian restaurant for every 1.3 residents, the second-highest rate in the country after New York. There is also a relative abundance of New York restaurants, which have more than 80 percent of the city's takeout. "The correlation is not totally true, but it is," said Linda M. Valerio, a restaurant consultant in Burlington. "The stereotype that New Yorkers eat out is true to a certain degree. There are a lot of New York restaurants that are very, very convenient. You can go in and out in the same amount of time as it takes to get a pizza." New Yorkers, she said, tend to rely on takeout. "In some ways, the city has always been an easier place to eat at home," she said. "New York takes it to another level. If you need to eat out, it's on the subway." The increasing popularity of dine-in restaurants in both cities has been one of the main drivers of the rise in the restaurant industry nationwide. Restaurants have more than regained their pre-recession level of employment, according to a new report released on Wednesday by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. The report is the first of its kind, focusing on restaurants that are open for lunch and dinner, and does not include quick-service restaurants. The report shows that the restaurant industry grew by 18 percent, from its 2009 level, a year that saw fewer Americans eat
