"It's not that simple, i'm really curious to know how many people hated "Batman" because of the Batsuit, and how many hated it for other reasons, and how many didn't really care about it either way" I'm very sympathetic to that but I think it's over-complicating the issue. There's a practical explanation. In "Batman", developers tried to present a whole world with different settings (mostly in Europe) and a number of localized games which is the reason why it was rather forgotten. While that didn't work out too well (no sales?) it's a valid reason, especially with the similar formula story but alternate settings. "Or we could create a whole culture, a whole environment" I like the idea, maybe I should also write about a history of computer games. Something like "History of Computer Games" and have a group of people with a different perspective on the subject, something like "Computer Game Historians" Honestly, there was a very big and bright red (green/yellow?) light hanging over the industry which went into oblivion in the late '90s. Grow a pair of dang ears and use the microphone... Not that I am suggesting you're not listening to what's playing - just that a mic is a very poor substitute for a pair of earbuds. That being said, if you're going to use the built-in audio, then you should use the built-in media player. Set it to default in the system. Personally, I find Fb4 to be a nasty program and avoid it. If I installed it, I'd probably uninstall it after a day or two just because of the work involved in setting it all up and whatnot. It also doesn't appear to be updated with any of the latest security fixes or anything. It's basically bug ridden. The media player is buggy, and it's designed with horrible performance. The good news is that Windows doesn't come with a built-in media player anyway. Fb4 has a Browser... I would take that over microsoft mediaplayer... The effects of zooplankton species richness and species composition on bacterial production were studied in a Mediterranean freshwater lake (Lake Vouliagmeni, 67 degrees 29'N, 28 degrees 19'E; 116 m depth) during 1999. Microzooplankton (MOZ) and mesozooplankton (MESZ) were separated from the other planktonic fauna using a combination of 0.45, 0.2 and 0.1 microm mesh-size nets. Growth of dissolved bacteria and bacterial nitrogen (BN) were correlated positively with MOZ
