Note the scalloped edges of the mounds, the shadow, and the interesting play of light on the grass. I used a black velvet to pull the light and the shadow together. Black oil and white acrylic paint. Sponging pumice on white paper. All that blue does make me feel blue... or more appropriately, dreary. I had planned to do a pumpkin painting, but I just can't bring myself to do that! A lovely painting. Thank you so much for sharing it with us at Four Season Farm. :) It was lovely meeting you! Ooooh, I love to paint all my vellum (or heavily varnished paper.) The glimmer of reflection of the light in the glass is wonderful! I am glad to see, though, you won't be painting this next year! You deserve to be tired from the harvest and go back to painting later! Thanks for stopping by my blog!Kansas health officials will expand a statewide outbreak of gonorrhea to 10 counties in mid-July, giving people at-risk of being infected through oral or anal sex extra time to get screened for the sexually transmitted disease. The Kansas Department of Health and Environment said Tuesday that it
