Version: 0.6.1. It has taken a long time, and my progress is great, but finally it looks like the game will run in 1080p on my PC. Another problem which I did not have before is that the game flickers a bit on screen. I discovered that it was a problem related to font-smoothing, and that changing the font smoothing setting to 0 fixes that problem. That alone doesn't solve all of my graphics issues, but it is a huge improvement. Another problem I was having is with using the gamepad with the game. Before I found out that I needed to set my steering bias (or turn sensitivity) to 0, I was having a lot of issues with that. The game would seem to turn a lot more than I expected (even though I set my controls to very low sensitivity). Now it is functioning as I would expect it to. On Thursday the White House press office posted a video of a series of events that they claimed was a "real life" situation in North Korea following a previous post. Following the initial April "false flag" post, most believed this to be a hoax (in retrospect it turns out to be less than a month later in April), but now we are told that it actually happened earlier this year. The latest viral post from the White House press office features a real life "enactment" from that April and the White House press office also shared it with North Korean officials. The article states, that because the video is "real," the "United States stands ready to use the full range of capabilities at its disposal, should a threat to the United States and its allies arise." According to the video description, this is a real life situation of an April 13th attack by the North on their test site at the Punggye-ri Nuclear Test Site. The site was hit with two explosions as it was reportedly trying to conduct another nuclear test. The footage is said to have been taken a few days after the nuclear test, in what they claim is the secondary site. You can watch the video below: The video shows people running away from the explosion and being treated for injuries.
