1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to high-frequency circuits, such as waveguide systems having circuit components, such as semiconductor-integrated-circuit (hereinafter referred to as SIC) in combination therewith, to high-frequency modules including such waveguide systems, and also to high-frequency equipment and SIC-mounted communications equipment employing such high-frequency modules. 2. Description of the Related Art Among high-frequency modules, commonly used high-frequency modules have planar circuit components, such as SIC, mounted on a planar dielectric plate. In this high-frequency module, the radio-frequency (hereinafter RF) signal entering the front end of the module is propagated through the dielectric plate and a waveguide, the waveguide having a dielectric tube or a waveguide lumen, which passes through the dielectric plate. A plurality of component parts of the high-frequency circuit, which are made up of a plurality of conductor patterns formed on the dielectric plate, are connected to the waveguide. The higher-frequency signals generated in each circuit component, when propagated through the waveguide, radiate electromagnetic waves in the waveguide lumen and thus generate interference to other high-frequency components. Therefore, in order to prevent the generation of interference, a metal cap is attached to the waveguide lumen. A step is provided in a wall of the metal cap so that the vicinity of the waveguide lumen can be covered. In one example, as disclosed in Japanese Patent Publication No. JP-A-2000-90991, a metal cap includes a flange made of a metal sheet and a cap made of a metal sheet, with their surfaces facing each other provided to define an opening. The flange has a step provided in the vicinity of the opening. The cap has a recess formed in its outer wall to cover an inner periphery of the opening. In another example, as disclosed in Japanese Patent Publication No. JP-A-2000-232779, a metal cap having a C-shaped cross-sectional structure is provided. A step is formed in a wall of the C-shaped metal cap, and covers an opening formed in a dielectric plate through which a waveguide passes. However, when the metal cap is directly mounted onto the dielectric plate, the size of the metal cap is limited. Thus, a problem arises in that an

You could also add in the A, which was basically a G with an all new power plant and a few extras like the A/M and the S/T. You might consider the G and A models to be one and the same. The G was a quick-shifting version of the A and the A was a more traditional Shiftbox. Re: Autre Monde Originally Posted by gazebo No, they are mostly versions of the same tech. I think it's more of the fact of they were R-series, C-series and a mix of A- series. Re: Autre Monde Originally Posted by Aaron_G I think it's more of the fact of they were R-series, C-series
